Special Correspondence.

Mrs. Chas. A. Myers, 201 Hanna St., Fort Wayne, Ind., writes Oct. 7, 1894: "I suffered terribly with severe headaches, dizziness, backache and nervousness, gradually growing worse until my life was despaired of, and try what we would, I found no relief until I commenced using Dr. Miles' Nervine. I have taken five bottles and believe I am a well woman, and I have taken great comfort in recommending all of my friends to use Nervine. You may publish this letter if you wish, and I hope it may be the means of saving some other sick mother's life, as it did mine."

MAMMOTH BLAST FURNACE.

The Immense Concern That Is Being Built by the Carnegie Company.

IRON AGE: "The blast furnace plant which is being built at the Duquesne works of the Carnegie Steel Company, near Pittsburgh, is the scene of extraordinary activity, and even now the magnificient proportions of this greatest furnace plant are evident. There will be four furnaces, each twenty-foot high and 100 feet long. The shell of one furnace is in place and the work on its hot blast stoves progressing. The cast houses of it and the second stack are being erected, while an army of men are working on the foundations for the two additional furnaces. A very large pit has been excavated for the stock house, in which the bin system is to be introduced for the fuel, while a large stock area is provided for the ore, the general plan being to reduce the cost of handling materials to a minimum. The foundations are in place for the great pumping plant for the furnaces, which is to consist of five pumping engines of 5,000,000 gallons daily capacity each. The principal novelty in the design of the furnace proper will be in the top. The gas will be taken off in six large openings which unite in one circular pipe connecting with the downcomer, which enters dust catcher of exceptionally large proportions. Above the top proper rises a large cylinder provided with a second bell, into which the stock will be delivered automatically from the incline planes connecting with the stockhouse. The stock is dropped by the lowering of this bell on to the main furnace bell, which is lowered after the upper bell is closed, thus reducing the waste of gas to a minimum and guarding against any explosion, the danger of which is lessened by the exceptionally large openings by which the gas is taken from the furnace. The capacity of these great furnaces is rated at 450 to 500 tons per day each. Altogether the plant promises to become the model monumental furnace plant in the country. It is expected that the first two furnaces will be ready to blow in early in the spring, the others to follow in the fall. The labor cost will probably be reduced to a figure unprecedented in American furnace practice. The Duquesne steel works have lately proven their capacity to deal with the product of even so large a furnace plant."

WOOL.

Bradstreet's: There is a steady tone to the market, the opening of the London sale on Tuesday at better prices than was expected tending to revive the feeling on this side. Reports from the London side are that all choice wools are steady at about the same prices as at the close of the previous sale, with inferior wools 2½ per cent lower. The expectation was that the London sale would open at about 50½ per cent off. About 1,000 bales were purchased for this country at the first day's sale. Trade is ruled quiet as a whole, but this market is cheaper than abroad, and it would not be surprising if some good sized lines were taken during the next week. It was rumored on the street that a line of from 1,000,000 to 2,000,000 pounds of territory wool was bought by our large manufacturer, but no such sale has been reported as yet. Values held steady for these wools on the sound basis of 3½¢ for fine, with some choice lines of Montana higher. Fleecy wools are quiet, but steady at 19½¢ for XX and XX and above, some fancy parcels being held at 2¢. Medium washed fleeces are quiet but steady. Australian wools are well reduced in stock and hold firm. Carpet wools are quiet.

There are things looming up in the financial horizon which suggest at least the possibility of a revival of speculation with the opening of the new year. "Coming events cast their shadows before them," and some shrewd observers think they can already trace the outlines of such shadows. Strange to say, these seeming suggestions of "good times coming" are traced in the very movement that has lately created so much apprehension on the borders of Europe and to a less extent in this city. There is a mystery of strength in the Kaffir speculation that deserves attention. The shares have not fallen at either London or Paris so much as had been expected; and there has now come a sharpness of reaction in them that excites surprise. The scrutiny to which distrust has subjected them has publicly developed the fact that while many of the enterprises were worthless, and more were overcapitalized or uncertain as to their results, yet the great speculation, taken as a whole, means that sources of gold have been discovered in Africa exceeding all previous findings in history. In other parts of the world also important deposits of the yellow metal have been unearthed; and in Colorado a gold mining excitement has arisen which seems to imply really valuable discoveries. All this is important, not so much for what it is in itself as a branch in speculation, as for what it implies. It means that the world is to see forthwith a very important increase in its supply of gold. No less an authority than the noted French economist, Paul Leroy-Beaumel, states in The Forum that, in two or three years, the annual new supply of gold will amount to from 200 to 240 millions of dollars, and that this output will continue for 25 to 30 years and possibly for 50 years. Comparing this estimate with that of other authorities, it would seem to be a very moderate one and may possibly be materially surpassed by the event. This prospect, so conspicuously brought before public attention by the Kaffir excitement, is beginning to receive practical attention in speculative circles in Europe. It is argued that it foretells a virtual inflation of the cardinal money of the world; that the increase of gold will induce an increase in the amount of paper money based upon it; and that the world is thus closely verging upon an inflation of its stock of currency. This, it is reasoned, means continued low rates of interest, abundance of money, an advance in the prices of all products, and from that an increase of production. These conditions, it is further inferred, must lead to a universal revival of trade, to the creation of new enterprises and to a reversal of the depressed state of affairs that came with the Barings failure.
